Do you like Phil Collins? I've been a big Genesis fan ever since the release of their 1980 album Duke. Before that, I didn't really get any of their work: too artsy, too intellectual. It was on Duke where Phil Collins' presence became more apparent. I think Invisible Touch was the group's undisputed masterpiece. It's an epic meditation on intangibility. At the same time, it deepens and enriches the meaning of the previous three albums.

- For real though, Genesis' first album is interesting. Sounds more like the Moody Blues/60s-era Bee Gees.
- Also, their prog albums are good. I will fight about this.

The crowd fucking ROARS your name!
Oh, It's finally happened! You're there! They love and adore you! You, yes you restored the Known world back into HaRmOnY!

Time and space at your control, dreams are yours!

At your command!

you stuck with it and you did it!

You lived out your dreams.

Now, reality!

one day I'm gonna be famous. Or maybe all my dreams will die as life moves faster + faster until I'm full of regret. Or even worse, maybe I'll just forget about my dreams entirely. Maybe I'll look back and think about how foolish I was, how unrealistic it all was, and how much time I wasted when I could have been working on building my resumé. Maybe I'll be one of those adults that tells kids they can't actually be a princess or space cowboy. Maybe I'll become one of those people that asks [redacted] teenagers, "but what's your back-up plan?" Maybe I'll say, "well you can do that in your free time, but how are you gonna make money?" I don't ever want to be bitter, I don't ever want to lose hope. But fuck, it's getting harder. Some days I don't know. The future is too dark, so I cling to the conventional. But maybe I'll do it. Maybe I'll be the exception. One day I'm gonna be famous.

I believe in Youuuuuuuve.

9:59 AM March 3, 2018

I just got invited to join DJ Andrea and Elena to come here, both wanna-be DJs clearly.

They just told me about a time when Elena f*cked up and played an exotic song with 90 percent vocal fry. ☹ Typical Elena.

Anyway, evidently I can't leave until I put in an entry. We got into some really sweet debates. Good debaters learn the other sides'/side's perspectives and come to a compromise.

This place looks like I just went back all the way to 1999. Really creepy... But I want to come here again. Woo-hoo! Apparently I'm going to Dunkin Donuts in a bit.

Signing out!
